

Tabernacle Nears Completion

6 Apr 1988

The Heber City Council agreed to a few change orders on the Tabernacle renovation, okayed a new furnace for the airport building, and discussed changes in sign and zoning ordinances during a special meeting called last Thursday evening.

The change orders on the Tabernacle, which will be the new city office building, included adding a wall in the judge's office, to provide space for a secretary, new outside doors for the east and south sides, cleaning the sand rock and repairing the mortar, for an additional cost of $10,000 to $12,000. Councilman Scott Wright said the roofers were responsible for some damage on the north wall and will pay for that side.

He said it will be at least another month before the project is completed and no date has been set yet for the city offices to be moved into the building.

Sign Ordinance

The council tentatively approved changes in the city sign ordinances, recommended by the planning commission, using Murray City's ordinances as a guide. If the changes are adopted, the new mini-mall on Main Street will be able to put its name on an awning extending over the sidewalk, which would not be allowed under the present ordinance. The proposed ordinance will be published in The Wave for three weeks and will come before the council for final approval at its April 21 meeting, after a public hearing.
